Drop Mail Here

An Italian girl addressed a letter to O. M. "Some old addresses appear on letters passing through the St. Louis Post Office," said a mail clerk, "even when you don't count the queer mistakes caused by ignorance of the English language. Lots of people seem to think the postal clerk has nothing to do but decipher gibberish. We always make an effort to assure the writer's meaning, however, and usually succeed."

"One letter puzzled us for a time before we hit on the translation of the mysterious address. The envelope is inscribed simply: 'Hill John Mass.'"

"What was it? Why, John Underhill. Another 'Mass.' of course. It was easy after it was pointed out."

The strange case of all was that of a letter addressed to O. M. Wagoner, I. T. When we suggested that she spell out the name of the person to whom it was addressed, she became suspicious. That was just what she didn't want to do, her handsome youth and his name equally attractive and some rich girl in this town had just sent her a letter and she began a flirtation by mail.

CHINAMAN'S WHITE WIFE EXPOSES THE HIGHBINDERS.

Tells of Four Murders of Women in New York Because They Had Learned Too Much of Society's Things.

Washington, Oct. 27.—Plying from Chicago highlanders in New York, Lucy Lowbury, white, 26 years old, who says she is the wife of a Chinese cigar merchant in Manhattan, today, surrounded a representative of the press to the railway station here to-day to relieve her conscience by telling of the doings in the Chinatown of the metropolis.

Yesterday the woman said she was warned by a white wife of another Chinaman that the highlanders had decided that she knew too much, and was to be disposed of.

She hastily gathered up some money, told her husband she was going to a store across the street, and departed for her home in the South.

Several years ago she went to New York in search of work. She was young, good-looking and from the country. She met the Chinaman, the afterwards married, she said, while under the influence of opium. During her life with him she learned his language, and consequently much of the doings of Chinamen in New York.

She said she had knowledge of four white women who had been murdered by their Chinese husbands because they "knew too much." Her bodies disappeared in all cases.

The Boston suit-case mystery, now baffling the police, she believed to be another of such cases.
